

Despite the immense value of America's public lands, special interests are working hard to hand lands over to the state of New Mexico. When it comes to land management decisions, the state wouldn't just swap in new players-it would change the whole game. In state hands, everything else would come second to generating income from these lands. Take a look at what state seizure of America's public lands would actually do.

1. State and local economies would take a serious hit.

The transfer of America's public lands to state hands would have a negative impact on local economies across the state.

Tax increases

$86 million for fires

$37.4 million lost

taxpayers taking over the enormous costs of management.

A potential reality for 1.2 million

New Mexicans would pay for wildfire suppression costs on an additional 22.9 million acres.

New Mexico counties would lose federal Payments in Lieu of Taxes.

2. It wouldn't take much to sell off our treasured public lands.

New Mexico State Trust Lands are constitutionally mandated to be managed for maximum profit. These lands are managed by a Commissioner of Public Lands and a State Land Trusts Advisory Board. These people have considerable power over the sale and use of state lands, while the sale of large parcels of BLM or national forest lands requires an act of Congress.

New Mexico has already sold 31 percent of its original land grant.

Outdoor recreation is more restricted on state lands than on America's public lands. For example, on New Mexico State Trust Lands:

at the cost of $25.00/year. Access to most national lands is free. Recreational shooting is prohibited.

Recreational access must be purchased

Camping is only allowed with the written

Campfires are prohibited.

Off-road vehicle use is prohibited.

permission of the surface lessee.

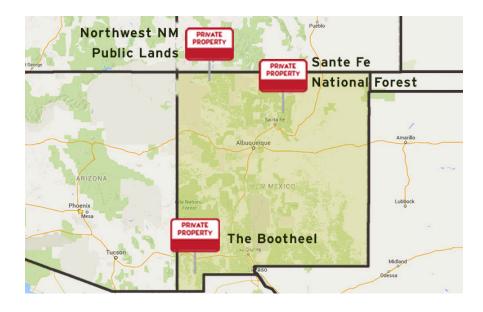

The New Mexico Game and Fish Dept. pays the state $200 thousand each month to allow public hunting on state lands.

If the state of New Mexico were to seize 22.9 million acres of BLM and national forest lands, it is highly likely that important lands would be sold off and closed to hunting, fishing, and public access.

3. Public access would be at risk.

Without the resources or mandate to manage world-class hunting and fishing destinations for wildlife or recreational access, these areas important to sportsmen and the general public could be headed to the auction block:

Santa Fe National Forest: According to Field & Stream Magazine, this area rates as one of the best in the nation for hunting big bull elk.

Northwest New Mexico Public Lands:

Public lands in this region of the state offer a great shot at big bucks migrating down from Colorado late during the hunting season.

The Bootheel: Located in far southwestern New Mexico, this area is the answer to a lot of Coues deer and quail hunters' winter prayers.

4. New Mexico long ago relinguished any claim to America's public lands

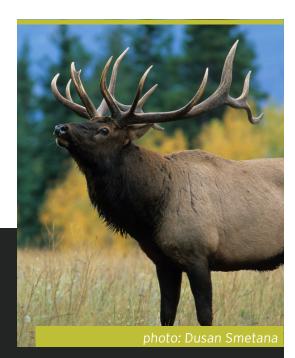

"That the people inhabiting said proposed State do agree and declare that they forever disclaim all right and title to the unappropriated and ungranted public lands lying within the boundaries thereof..." –ENABLING ACT June 20, 1910

THERE IS A BETTER WAY

We live in a democracy where Americans have been rolling up their sleeves and solving problems for more than two centuries. Instead of considering the unworkable idea of land seizure, it is time for stakeholders to find common ground to improve the management of our treasured public lands.

Get involved today, and tell your state and federal lawmakers that America's public lands are not for sale. Urge them to reject any proposed seizure of these lands by signing the petition at sportsmensaccess.org.

For more information, contact Joel Webster, TRCP Western Lands Director at jwebster@trcp.org. For media inquiries, contact Kristyn Brady, TRCP Director of Communications at kbrady@trcp.org. To learn more about the Theodore Roosevelt Conservation Partnership, go to trcp.org. Works Cited available at sportsmensaccess.org/workscited.